

Social Services Summary

The LSC Team undertook the Social Services Provider Survey as part of an investigation of the transportation needs of mobility-impaired individuals in Montana. This survey was designed to gain information about the transportation needs of the low income, elderly, and disabled from the perspective of organizations that work closely with these mobility-impaired populations.

The objectives of the Social Services Provider Survey were to:

- Determine the extent to which social service agencies serve the mobility-impaired population.
- Determine the type of mobility impairments present in populations served by social service agencies.
- Identify the extent to which social service agencies address the problem of mobility impairment by providing transportation services to their clientele.
- Assess, in the opinion of social service agencies, the effectiveness of current transportation systems in serving the needs of the mobility-impaired population.

To accomplish these objectives, social service agencies were interviewed via written questionnaire about the transportation needs of the populations they serve. Approximately 130 agencies from across the state completed the questionnaire, and their responses are summarized in this chapter.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE FINDINGS

Nearly all responding social service agencies (95 percent) serve people who have mobility limitations.

- Sixty percent of the responses were from private, nonprofit agencies.
- Fifty percent of the agencies list transportation as one of the primary social services they provide.

On average, agencies estimate that 53 percent of the individuals they serve have one or more mobility limitations. The estimate by social service agencies that 53 percent of their clients have mobility-limited impairments supports the idea that disadvantages—such as poverty, unemployment, physical disabilities, or health problems—are often accompanied by a lack of mobility. Table VII-1 shows the percentage of agencies, which have participants with various types of mobility impairments.

Table VII-1 Agencies Serving Participants with Mobility Impairments

Age-related	86%
Cannot afford motor vehicle	42%

Column sums to more than 100%. Multiple responses allowed.

Overall, approximately 16 percent of the social service agencies reported that they have clients who use public transportation (fixed route or Dial-A-Ride) to access their offices or services. Thirty percent of the agencies report they have clientele who use fixed-route bus service; thirty percent of the agencies report that Dial-A-Ride transportation is used by some clients to access services.

Approximately three out of four (70 percent) agencies supply some type of transportation to their clientele. The majority of agencies that provide transportation do so by using the agency vehicle. Only 26 percent of agencies charge participants for their transportation services. Agencies that provide transportation assistance usually identify public funding sources for providing transportation:

- 42% city, county, or special district
- 54% through donations, United Way, fund raising, or volunteer
- 47% state funds
- 51% federal funds

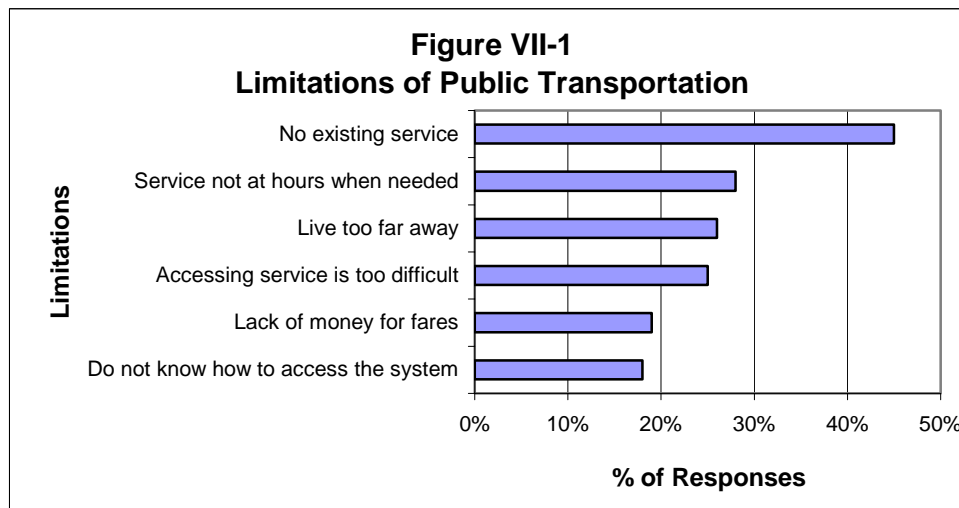

Agencies report that they provide transportation assistance through such programs as Medicaid, Vocational Rehabilitation, Temporary Aid to Needy Families (TANF), Job Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS), Job Training Partnership Act (JPTA), Special Transportation Fund, and through state and local general funds.

The majority of agencies (71 percent) limit the transportation that they provide to both specific groups of participants of specific types of trips. Twenty-nine percent of agencies that supply transportation place no restrictions on who can use the services or how the service can be used. Over half (68 percent) of the restrictions are limits placed by the funding source. About three out of ten agencies also have their own agency policies limiting eligible travelers or trips.

Overall, social service agencies are mixed in their opinions about public transportation's ability to provide trips for their clients when and where they need them. Twenty-nine percent of the agencies reported no service available in the area. Thirty percent of the agencies get most or all of the transportation services they need to travel to agency services. Those having trouble obtaining public transportation do so because no service is available.

Agencies indicated a number of reasons that travel to their offices or services via public transportation may be limited. Figure VII-1, on the following page, shows the primary responses.

Moreover, one out of five agencies report that travel to their services is limited because their participants do not know how to use the services. Educating agency staff and clients on how to use public transportation may help meet some of this need.

Over 75 percent of the agencies believe that there is at least some unmet demand for transportation among their clientele, reporting additional trips needed in order to meet their needs. Agencies report that transportation for shopping, medical, personal business, and social/recreational are the types of trips most difficult for their clients to obtain.

Over one half (51 percent) of the agencies think that their communities would support an increase in taxes to fund improvements in public transportation for seniors and people with disabilities.

Agencies were asked how important they feel public transportation improvements are for seniors and people with disabilities in their community. The improvements that ranked the highest include:

- Greater number of door-to-door rides.
- Service easier to use for seniors and people with disabilities.
- Longer hours of operation.
- More days of operation.
- More wheelchair accessible vehicles.

CONCLUSIONS

The findings of this survey indicate that social service agencies recognize that mobility impairment affects a significant share of the people they serve, and they devote their resources to address this need. The following conclusions are drawn from this survey.

Public transportation in Montana plays a small role for many clients in rural areas of Montana.

- Public transportation in the urban areas plays a more vital role.
- Public transportation is utilized by social service agency participants at a higher rate (16 percent) than the general public (2 percent).
- Social service agencies statewide see a need for increased transportation services for mobility-impaired populations.

This survey provides an important source of information when examining the transportation needs of the mobility-limited population. Survey responses presented here are from the perspective of those who work closely with the mobility-limited populations. The needs identified for the social service agencies and those of the public transit agencies are used together to provide a full range of perspectives on the transportation needs for all populations. The findings of this survey and of the transit agency survey are useful for planners, policy makers, and transportation providers across the state. Later chapters of this report include additional analysis of the data collected in both surveys to determine the extent of the need and alternatives for meeting that need.

DETAILED SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

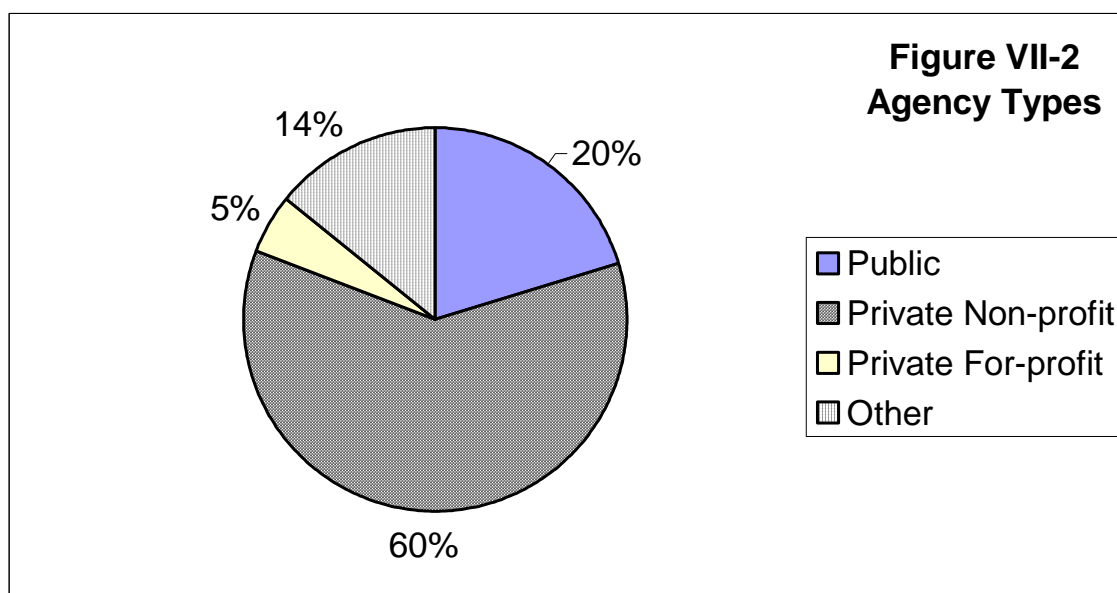

Social Service Agency Profile

State and local governments invest considerable resources in transportation services for their participants. While transportation is not the primary function for many of these agencies, the need to support mobility for their clients makes transportation a key program area.

Agency Type

Three out of five (60 percent) agencies responding to the survey were private nonprofit. Twenty percent of the responses were from public agencies. Figure VII-2 summarizes the type of agencies.

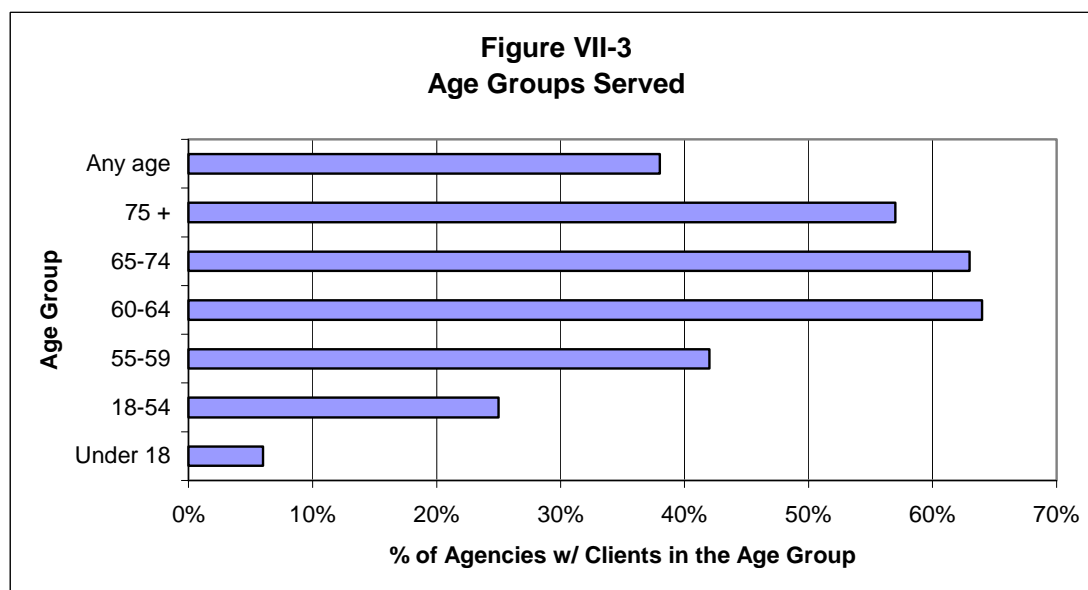

Service Provided

All agencies were asked to provide a list of the primary social services their agency provides. These responses are summarized in Table VII-2.

Table VII-2 Types of Services Provided
Type of Service	% of Providing Service
Alcohol, Tobacco or Drug Education & Treatment	1%
Diagnosis & Early Education	6%
Education/Training	19%
Employment Opportunities/Job Placement	18%
Health Care	30%
Housing	9%
Child Care	4%
Community Support Networks	24%
Family Support	17%
Family Safety & Production Housing	1%
Nutrition	42%
Life Skills Development and Assistance	20%
Transportation	48%
Residential Care	24%
Other	40%

Population Served

Responding agencies were asked for which age group(s) their services were designed. Thirty-eight percent of the responding agencies provide services to any age group. The most common age group served by the agencies who returned the survey is 60 to 64 years of age—more than three out of five (64 percent) of all agencies serve those individuals. Figure VII-3 summarizes these responses.

Number of Individuals Accessing Services

All agencies were asked how many individuals travel to their office or service per week. Overall, the estimated number of clients per week ranges from 1 to 1,000. This tremendous range reflects the great diversity in the size of agencies responding to the survey. An average of 123 individuals access the agencies' offices or services per week. Over one half (56 percent) of agencies, however, report that 75 or fewer individuals access their services per week. Thus, 50 individuals per week—the median number reported—may be a better measure of central tendency.

Extent Mobility-Impaired Population is Served

Each agency was asked if it serves individuals with mobility limitations. Nearly all agencies (96 percent) serve people with mobility limitations.

Type of Mobility Impairments

Agencies serving individuals with mobility impairments were asked the nature of the impairment served. These responses are summarized in Table VII-1, shown previously.

Agencies serve clientele with a wide range of mobility impairments, including physical (95 percent), cognitive (66 percent), vision (73 percent), and age-related (86 percent). Agencies also report serving clientele with mobility impairments related to income status or the environment. Forty-two percent of the agencies serve individuals who cannot afford a vehicle; 44 percent serve individuals who don't have a motor vehicle; and 26 percent serve individuals who have mobility impairments due to residing in a remote location. Agencies in rural areas are more likely to serve individuals with age-related mobility impairments.

Incidence of Mobility Impairment

On average, agencies estimate that approximately 53 percent of the individuals they serve have mobility impairments. The higher percentage reported by social service providers supports the notion that disadvantages due to unemployment, poverty, disabilities, and health problems are often accompanied by impaired mobility.

Transportation Used to Access Services

All responding agencies were asked what modes of transportation people use to access their offices or services. As shown in Table VII-3, the most common mode of transportation to the agency facility is by a family member. The next most common transportation methods used to access services are friends or neighbors driving the client or driving themselves. Thirty percent of the agencies report that some clientele use fixed-route bus service to access the agency; 30 percent report that Dial-A-Ride transportation is used by some to access service. It should be noted that an affirmative response to each transportation method indicates only that the agency serves one or more participants that use that transportation mode.

Table VII-3 Type of Transportation Used to Access Service
Type of Transportation	% of Agencies
Fixed-route bus service	30%
Dial-A-Ride service	30%
Van services for specific participants	35%
Private Taxi	17%
Medical Transportation (ambulance)	25%
Private vehicle driven by agency	42%
Family	60%
Friends or neighbor	59%
Drive themselves	59%
Other	21%
Column adds to more than 100%. Multiple responses allowed.

Use of Public Transportation to Access Services

On average, agencies estimate that approximately 16 percent of the individuals they serve use public transportation to access the agencies' offices or services. Forty-five percent of the agencies report that there is no existing public transportation, and another 13 percent report that there is no service to the agencies' locations.

Agency-Provided Transportation

All agencies were asked if they provide any type of transportation to their participants. Approximately three out of four agencies (70 percent) supply some type of transportation to their participants.

Type of Transportation Provided

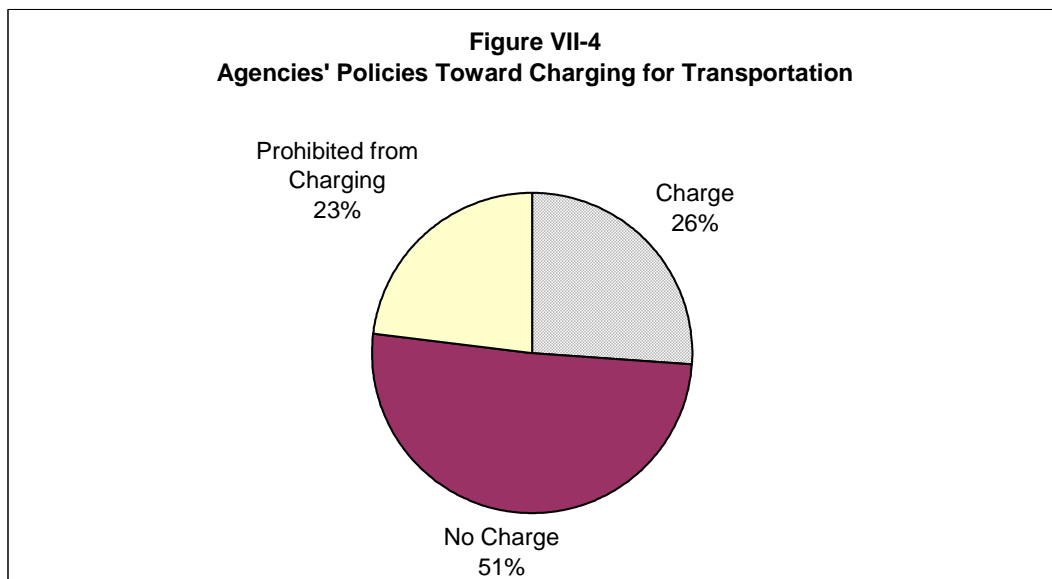

Social service agencies were asked to indicate the types of support they provide for their participants to receive transportation. Overall, they provide the most trips—an average of 254 trips per week—by providing a ride from the agency's vehicle. Table VII-4 summarizes the transportation methods used by agencies.

They provide an average of 41 trips per week by providing a bus pass for the clientele.

Table VII-4 Transportation Provided Directly by Agency
Type of Transportation	Mean # Trips per Week
Provide ride from agency vehicle	254
Provide bus pass	41
Provide cash to participants for transportation	5
Other	61
TOTAL NUMBER OF TRIPS	361

Cost to Participant

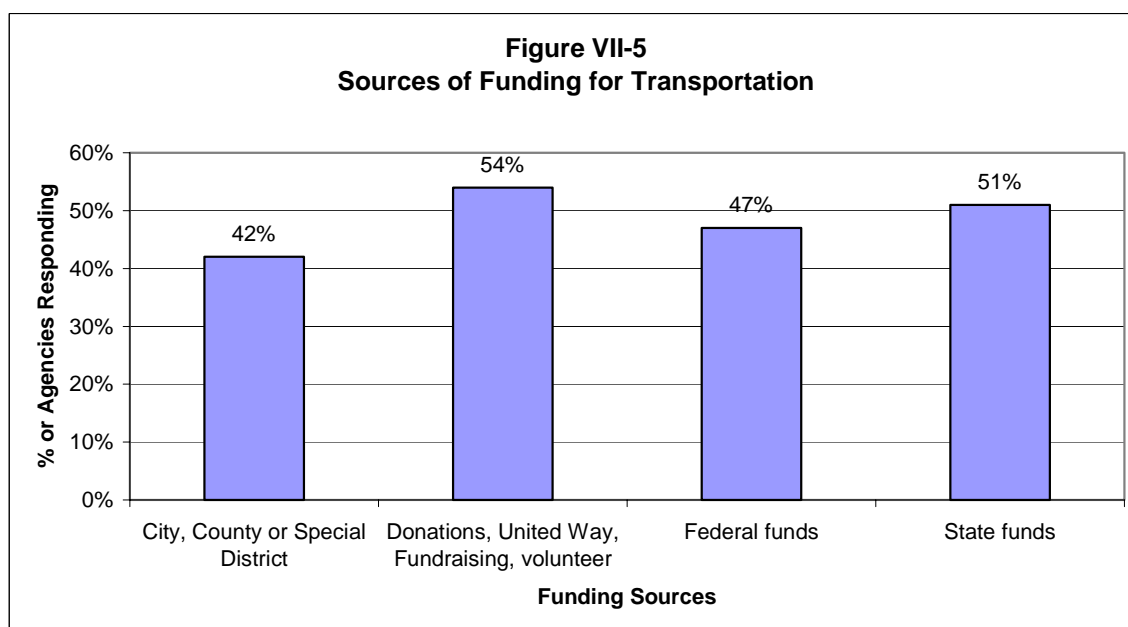

Agencies who provide transportation were asked if they charge participants to use the service. Twenty-six percent of agencies charge participants for their transportation services. Twenty-three percent are prohibited from charging, and 51 percent do not charge for services—most likely due to an agency policy and funding restrictions. Figure VII-4 summarizes the responses.

Funding Sources

Agencies who provide transportation to their participants were asked the source of the funding for providing transportation. These responses are shown in Figure VII-5. It is important to note that the classification of funding into federal, state, and local sources is based on the perceptions of the respondents.

- The most frequently mentioned sources of funding are donations, United Way, fundraising, and volunteer—54 percent of agencies that provide transportation say they receive some funding from these sources.
- The least frequently mentioned sources of funding are city, county, or special district—42 percent receive funding from these sources.

Limitations

Agencies that supply transportation were asked if they limit their transportation services to specific groups of participants or for specific types of trips. This information on funding source and policy restrictions may suggest areas where coordination and opportunities may exist for expansion of transportation options by providing more flexible uses of funds.

Approximately 70 percent of agencies who supply transportation limit the service to specific groups of participants or residents. Sixty-eight percent of the agencies limit the trips because of a funding source restriction. Providing transportation to persons with disabilities is the most common limitation imposed by the agencies on specific groups of participants—53 percent limit their transportation to this group. Table VII-5 lists other limitations on the type of participant that can participate in agency-provided transportation.

Table VII-5 Limitations on Types of Participants Receiving Transportation
Type of Participant	% of Agencies Responding
People with disabilities	53%
Seniors only	43%
Low Income	9%
Veterans	5%
Children	0%
Students	0%
Other	22%
Column adds to more than 100%. Multiple responses allowed.

Consistent with the percentage of agencies limiting trips to specific groups of participants, half of the agencies limit their transportation services to specific types of trips. Nearly half (39 percent) of the agencies limit the trips because of a funding source restriction. Sixty-one percent of the agencies limit their transportation trips because of agency policy. Eighty-one percent of the agencies answered “Other” for their response on how trips are limited. Providing transportation for medical visits is the second most common type of trip restriction placed by agencies—45 percent limit their transportation in this way.

Public Transportation's Ability to Meet Needs

Transportation to Agency Services

Agencies were asked how they would rate public transportation's ability to provide trips to agency services. On a statewide basis, social service agencies are mixed in their ratings. The most common response from agencies is that they do not have service available—29 percent do not get service. Thirty percent of the agencies get most trips, but not all, and an additional 24 percent of the agencies get only limited trips, for specific purposes only. To summarize, those areas with public transportation service as an option do provide most trips. But, many areas across the state do not have the option of public transportation to utilize.

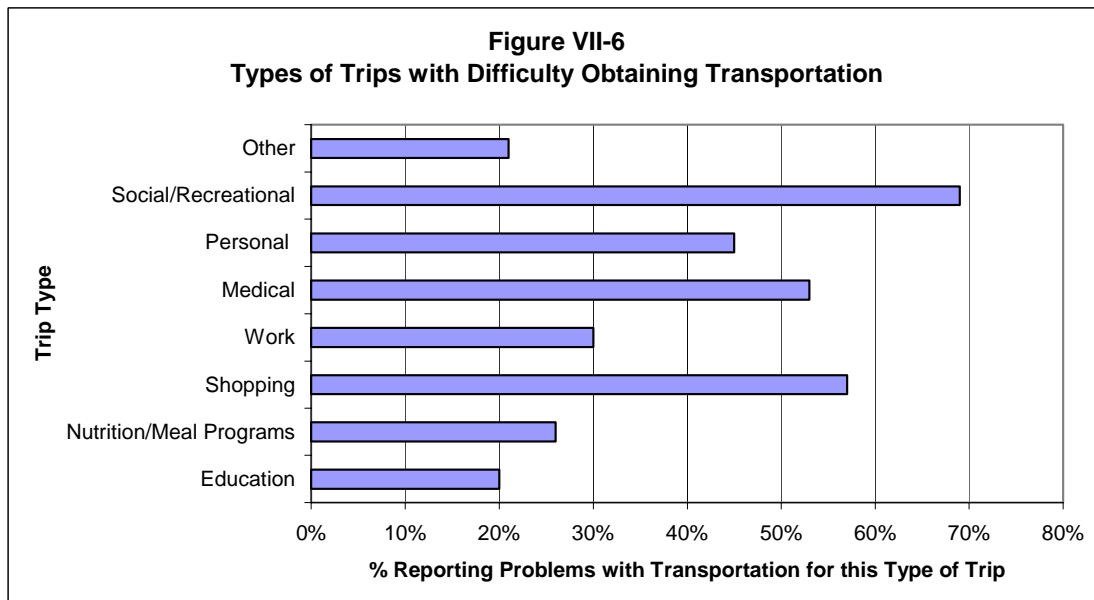

All agencies were asked why they thought their participants have limited access to public transportation for trips to the agencies' office or services. Responses are summarized in Table VII-6.

Table VII-6 Why Trips are Limited
Reasons Why Trips Are Limited	% of Agencies Responding
No existing service	45%
No service to our location	13%
Service does not operate when needed	28%
Accessing service is too difficult	25%
Do not qualify for services	8%
Lack of money for fares	19%
Do not know how to access system	18%
Live too far away	26%
Have been turned away in the past and given up	4%
Other	17%
Column adds to more than 100%. Multiple responses allowed.

Reasons for limitations on participants' travel by public transportation include: no existing service (45 percent), service does not run during hours when rides are needed (28 percent), accessing system is too difficult (25 percent), and live too far away (26 percent). Approximately 20 percent of the agencies report that their clients do not know how to access transportation services. Providing training on using public transportation may help meet the travel needs of many agency clients.

Unmet Transportation Needs

Agencies were asked for what type of trips (other than trips to the agencies' services) their participants have difficulty obtaining transportation. Social or recreational events, shopping, and medical are the most often mentioned type of trips. Figure VII-6 illustrates the types of trips for which participants have difficulty obtaining transportation.

Importance of Transportation Improvements

Agencies were asked how important they felt public transportation improvements were for seniors and people with disabilities in their community. Responses were recorded on a five-point scale where "1" means "not needed" and “5” means “urgent.” All service improvements rated above a “2” (would be nice), but below a “4” (very important). Table VII-7 presents the rank of each public transportation improvement.

Improvements that agencies feel are most important include: service easier to use for seniors and people with disabilities (3.49), more days of operation (3.37), greater number of door-to-door rides (3.12), longer hours of operation (3.08), and more wheelchair accessible vehicles (2.92). Improvements that agencies feel are relatively less important include: easier to identify vehicles (2.1), more reliable on-time pickups (2.36), and more reliable drop-offs (2.42).

Table VII-7 Service Improvements Ratings
Service Improvement	Mean Score (1 = Not Needed, 5 = Urgent)
Greater number of door-to-door rides	3.12
More fixed-route service	2.49
Service easier to use for seniors and disabled people	3.49
Longer hours of operation	3.08
More days of operation	3.37
More reliable service	2.57
Vehicles in better condition	2.67
Lower fares	2.43
Easier trip scheduling over the phone	2.68
Printed schedules easier to read and understand	2.49
More reliable on-time pickups	2.36
More reliable drop-offs	2.42
Easier to identify vehicles	2.10
More wheelchair accessible vehicles	2.92
Better wheelchair securements	2.82
Better connections with other transit services	2.84
Column adds to more than 100%. Multiple responses allowed.

Support for Increased Funding

Agencies were asked, in their opinion, the extent to which people in their community would support an increase in taxes or an increase in state funding to fund improvements in public transportation for seniors and people with disabilities. The results are summarized in Figure VII-7.

Over one-half (51 percent) of the responding agencies think that their community would support an increase in taxes. The majority of these, however, believes that people would only somewhat support it (44 percent), as opposed to strongly support it (7 percent). Agencies believe that support would be greater for increased state funding for transportation. Twenty percent (22 percent) believe that people would strongly support an increase in state funding, while an additional 51 percent believe that people would somewhat support it.

CONCLUSIONS

The Social Service Provider Survey assessed the views of over 130 social service agencies throughout the State of Montana. The findings of this survey complement those of the Transit Provider Survey to identify the transportation needs of people with mobility impairments—i.e., individuals who, due to a physical, mental or cognitive disability, or because of their age and income, have difficulty obtaining transportation. The following conclusions may be drawn from the findings of this study:

- A small number of social service agencies' participants rely on public transportation to access social services. This is primarily due to the few public transportation systems in the rural areas of Montana. Public transportation is an important mode for those areas that have service. Overall, agencies estimate that 16 percent of their participants rely on public transportation to get to and from their offices or services. They estimate that just over half (53 percent) of their clients have some type of mobility impairment.
- Social service agencies statewide see a need for increased transportation services for mobility-impaired populations, particularly to meet the need for social/recreational, shopping, and medical trips. The Social Service Provider Survey concludes that current transportation services are insufficient to completely meet the needs of those who need them most—the mobility-impaired population.
- In the view of social service agencies, service improvements for existing transportation systems are needed. The specific type of improvements include increasing the number of door-to-door rides, increasing the days of operating and the hours, making service easier for seniors and people with disabilities, and increasing the number of wheelchair accessible vehicles.

This study provides an important source of information when examining the transportation needs of the mobility-impaired population. Survey responses are from the perspective of those who work closely with the mobility-impaired population. However, they should not be examined alone, but with the responses of the Transit Provider Survey. Together, these surveys provide a full range of perspectives on the transportation needs of the mobility-impaired, including the voice of the transportation provider and the social service providers.

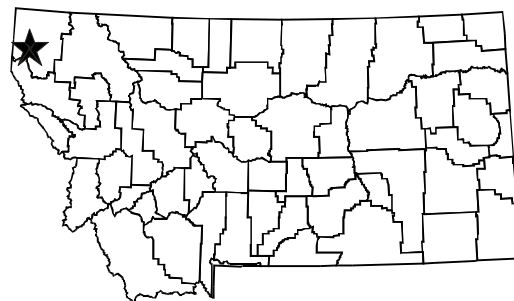

The findings of these surveys and final report for the study are useful for planners, policy makers, and transportation providers across the state. The survey data and final report are available to research and policy makers at other agencies working on transportation issues. The following pages provide a one-page summary profile for each of the social service agencies who responded to the survey. The agencies are presented in alphabetical order. If a section of the profile is not answered, it is due to no answer from the social service agency.
